The global economic slowdown in 2020 has pushed AUM across private debt to new record levels. As of June 2020, private debt AUM stands a $887bn. The market is now more than three times bigger than it was ten years ago, when managers held just $263bn in assets. Private debt is now the third largest asset class in private capital. Most of total AUM (61%) is constituted by funds focusing on North America, however other regions have gradually expanded their share. In particular, Europe-focused funds now makes up just under 30% of the total AUM.
