Supply Chains and Labor Examined

THE LEAD | September 22, 2021

One of the more fascinating aspects of the past 18 months has been watching the divergent economic narratives between headlines and data.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported a record high 10.9 million job openings in July. The three largest sectors comprising this increase were healthcare, finance, and food services.

Yet there also less than 9 million people unemployed. How can there be such a shortage of experienced workers when there are more jobs than jobless?…
